

Randy Pausch's, "Last Lecture" made me feel sad and happy. I can relate to this lecture in some small ways because my parents have enforced some of these same lessons in me as I was growing up. I think it's very sweet and special that he took the time to really think about the lessons he wanted his children to learn and that he included stories of his childhood. Randy's main message was about overcoming obstacles, and seizing every moment because time is all you have. I thought that was an amazing message that we forget often in the busy days of our everyday lives.
